Examine the ideas and influence of...

The Methodist Recorder, 1861-1919 and Methodist Publications, 1855-1919 contain British Methodist periodicals published during the 19th and 20th centuries.

Founded in 1861 with the mission 'to tell truth and love', the Methodist Recorder emerged as a more liberal rival to the first Methodist newspaper, The Watchman, which it later incorporated.

Both collections are part of British Online Archives' Spreading the Word series.

Despite a declining number of practising Methodists, The Recorder is still in print today.

They were sourced from the Oxford Centre for Methodism and Church History.

Methodist Publications includes copies of the Primitive Methodist Quarterly Review & Christian Ambassador (1887-1909), Holborn Review (1910-1919), and The London Quarterly Review and Christian Ambassador (1855-1919).

Subjects covered are wide-ranging, from current events and clerical intrigue to the promotion of worthy charities and literary
